Job Opportunities for General, Legal and Medical Transcriptionists

General transcription is easier and open to more workers as compared to medical or legal transcription. This type of transcription doesn't require any specialization/expertise, unlike medical or legal transcription. There are a plethora of general transcription companies hiring globally and the pay depends upon experience.

While a majority of transcription companies hire only within the US, some recruit worldwide.

How to Pass Transcription Tests?

If you are looking to work as a general transcriptionist but don't have any experience, you will need to clear a transcription test first. Some handy tips you need to follow to be fully prepared to pass a transcription test are:

Here are a few tips to pass transcription tests:

- You should find out what is the company's minimum required typing speed. If you are not quite upto the mark, you need to practice typing to improve your speed.
- You must have a computer, transcription software, and a high-speed internet connection.
- Practice transcribing: this will help you in getting used to the software as well as to listening and transcribing audio.
- Get a professional looking resume prepared.
- Make the transcript flawless in terms of grammar, spelling, and punctuation before you send it back to the company.
- Adhere to the style guides and the directions laid down by the company.
- It's very important to spell check and proof your transcript before submission.
- Show persistence without getting discouraged while taking tests.
